

Internship Abroad Decision Tree in times of Covid-19: to go or not to go abroad for internship

May 2021

Dear Student,

Leiden University has decided that study activities abroad can go ahead as of May 15, 2021, travel-advice permitting. That's good news! Now it's up to you to decide whether you should or shouldn't go, which can be very difficult in these ever-changing times. And of course, you can only go on condition that internship at your destination is both permitted and safe at the moment of departure.

This document is intended to help you to make a well-considered and well-timed decision. In short, you will need to:

- Read all the information on the university website about the conditions for going abroad and the FAQ's.
- Set yourself a deadline for making your decision. See the advice in section A below. Note your deadline in your agenda and stick to it!
- Continually monitor the latest Dutch government travel advice for your destination (in Dutch).
- After setting your deadline for making a decision, answer the questions under section B below to help you reach your final decision.

Still have questions after reading this advice? You can contact the Career Service Humanities for further information on practical considerations. We also advise you to discuss your decision with family, friends and fellow students.

A. How to set your deadline

Your deadline is the latest date on which you can make a decision without getting into difficulties. Set your deadline on the basis of the following factors:

1. Deadline for implementing your plan B
2. How long you need for travel and practical arrangements (i.e. deadlines for approval internship plan, grants, visa etc)
3. At what point will the lack of a decision become too stressful for you
4. At what point will there be (excessive) financial consequences if you delay further

To help you get a clear picture of where you stand in terms of these four factors, answer all the questions in the table below.

Am I prepared to incur costs even if my trip might not go ahead?	Yes: Go to next question No: Cancel your trip and implement your plan B instead.
